Cesium uses an $N \times N$ matrix of numbers in base B as a key. The trace of the matrix is added (mod b) to the plaintext bit to get the ciphertext bit. The key matrix is adjusted as a function of this ciphertext bit. Rows and columns are circular-shifted, depending on the trace of the current key and the latest ciphertext symbol.